

CHALLENGE

For most of the users the app served as a link to other services. We solved few tasks on spot, but couldn't control the UX of visited external sites that also often lacked some features when compared to their mobile apps

SOLUTION

Merging our services into a super app allowed us to provide answers without redirecting to a search results page or even to anticipate the question itself. The new architecture and technologies provided a better UX for the users as well as brought additional value for site owners and other Yandex products

Based on the analysis of the current app's usage, our business goals and the international market research, we figured out 3 main components required to build our own successful super app – mini apps, e-commerce, content feed. Stay with me to find out why and how do they work

E-COMMERCE PLATFORM

To evolve the whole web experience, we promoted mini apps development to site owners. It became especially beneficial for E-commerces

If you are looking for a specific product online you may end up at a poorly built website, asking yourself if it is reliable to use. On the other hand, mini apps were made with user-friendly components and had ratings to improve both UX and credibility. It was a game changer for sellers, who experienced increased profits from satisfied customers. In the meantime, we got a transactional revenue stream in addition to the classic ad model

CONTENT FEED

Though we didn't expect users to explore all of these fancy features if they would still use the app briefly. We made an effort to redesign our feed and make it more engaging and relevant to the person's interests

GOING BEYOND THE SCOPE

With all these changes we basically entered a new era – the one where we competed with ecosystems rather than separate services. Yandex as a whole was evolving and we wanted to manifest it

A LONG JOURNEY

To transform the app that much we had to run countless experiments, dealing with change aversion and getting closer to our goal with every next iteration

Initially a three-man design squad my colleagues and I shaped the vision of the future super app from larger components to smaller ones, pitched it weekly to stakeholders and gradually involved more teams to join us and work out final solutions on each others part.

What I am most proud of is that while I was asked to lead the e-commerce stream, I actively collaborated with other designers and the final version of the launched main screen was proposed and designed by me
